

Call for Papers

14th Annual Critical Finance Studies Conference, 2023

The 14th annual Critical Finance Studies conference will be held at the Institute for Mediterranean Studies (<https://www.ims.forth.gr/en/index>), in Rethymno, Crete, June 21-23, 2023.

Confirmed Keynote Speakers:

Teresa Heffernan (St. Mary's University, Halifax, NS) "AI as the 'New' Oil"

Paul Langley (Durham University) "FinTech Capitalism"

We invite contributions to our ongoing collaborative research project that seeks to engage finance in new and critical ways. Although critical attention is regularly devoted to finance, it generally takes the form of a call for transparency, or the systemic repair and restructuring of a paradigm in need of a shift. While finance is clearly a societal domain ridden with crisis, our sense of critique embraces the possibility of risky confrontations with the external powers that drive finance, as well as with internal, ethical combats that impact on the critic's own situation within academic discourses on finance. We are, therefore, calling for contributions that take into account the relationship of the critic to finance and to discourses on finance, including received values, moral codes, authoritarian knowledge, common sense, good will, opinion and implicit presuppositions. We also invite papers that approach finance through avenues that have been underexplored such as theology, philosophy, art, music, literature, film, new media and television, to give just a few examples.

Possible topics may include but are not limited to:

- Finance, art and philosophy
- Finance, public health, pandemics
- Theology of finance
- Finance and education
- Finance, rural communities, farming
- Finance and ethics
- Gambling/gaming and (public) finance
- Finance and visualization
- Over-indebtedness
- Finance and subjectivity
- Finance and play
- Boundaries of finance
- Sustainable finance
- Finance and value

Please submit abstracts for individual papers or panels (no more than 500 words) to Joyce Goggin (j.goggin@uva.nl) by February 1, 2023.